前瞻感言

(1) We cannot know all the information in the world, and even if we knew it, we wouldn't know what really happened. History is not an exact science. But we can make an educated guess based on the quality of the sources we read and always know in the back of our mind, nothing is objective. In the end, we must think about the world independently and come to our own conclusions. This is what it means to be well-informed in the world today.

(2) To be or not to be — to live intensively and richly, or merely to exist, that depends on ourselves. Let us widen and intensify our relations. While we live, let us live!

(3) Good luck is always to find the best prepared. The surest way to grasp opportunity and make our own luck is to be ready when opportunity knocks. As we work hard toward our goal, do not refuse good luck when it visits us, for I believe success comes from where hard work and luck go hand in hand.
